Schools Guide

Ramadan in Schools

- ✓ As with other faith groups, we encourage empathy and understanding, urging schools to make Ramadan a calendar highlight. It gives students a voice to share what their faith means to them.
- ✓ Students may need more time to adjust their schedules throughout Ramadan, so consider accommodating more breaks. Therefore, a dedicated space should be created for praying indoors and asking if students feel comfortable doing PE.
- ✓ The BBC has produced some handy resources to help children and young people learn about Ramadan – on their website and via NewsRound on YouTube.
- ✓ Learning about a fellow student or staff member's faith or belief should never occur just in RE class. Creating space for open dialogue helps foster understanding and empathy.
- ✓ Take time to engage Muslim parents and students about Ramadan and what staff can do to accommodate via online portals or surveys.
- ✓ Teacher-specific platforms also have resources for staff wanting to help Muslim students during Ramadan.
